Control of Gene Expression in Prokaryotes
How do prokaryotes regulate gene expression?

Why?
 Bacteria usually have a light sensor in their eyes, but it would be wasteful to have every light sensor all the time, or else an animal to see all the light in order that, on one hand, bacteria can make sense of light in the environment. Light-sensitive cells are sensitive to light off-hand as well as on-hand. In prokaryotes, genes are grouped together without much. This group of genes arranged in a row is called an operon. The region that is called an operon.
